SUPPLEMENT TO REPORT NO.

In January 1952 the Chinese Communist Foreign Language School in Peiping added three new languages to the curriculum: Malay, Indian, and Arabic. Formerly only Russian, English, and Japanese were taught. The three new classes have enrolled more than 110 students. The curriculum also included studies of the political, economic, social, and living conditions of the localities appropriate to those languages.¹

25X1A 1. Comment. The students are presumed to be going to such areas after graduation.

25X1A Comment. report on the training of Russian language specialists and the various schools which have been set up for this purpose, including the Peking Russian Language Specialized School which may be the school reported here.
